Every Day is Mother's Day

by Katy Wise

Every day is Mothers day as Mother's day never ends
She spends her time cleaning and to our will she bends.

In 1914 she stayed at home alone
And kept the country going without a single moan.

In 1928 a mother showed her might
And ran out in front of a horse in protest of her plight

In 1939 once again she must Put on hold all longings, emotions, feelings, lust

And rise up to a challenge, of which she did not ask
And help fight a power from behind a cruel gas mask.

Then came the 50's and home she was expected to stay
But instead got up Mother and went to earn her pay.

Some twenty years later on, she stripped off her bra
And Mothers from all over set off and marched.

And about 1985 Mothers would stand no more,
They demanded a wage like Papa's, so they could walk out the door.

A new age hit the 90's and now Dad sits at home,
He has the Baby on his lap and feeds it all alone.

Mothers across the world now in meetings sit on high
And crawl across a desert to guard our own Front Line

So every day is Mother's Day and should be honoured so
From the second we picked that forbidden fruit when tempted by a foe...
