Film Review by Five-Year-Old Olivia Clark

by Christina Buchanan

What I liked about William is that he was good at drawing and he drew everything and Mr Tom bought him a paintbox and stuck his pictures on the wall and he ate too much cake at his birthday party and got sick which I didn't 'cos I like jelly and you could never have too much jelly. But William wet the bed which made me feel really sorry for him because you can't help it, but Mr Tom was kind and didn't tell him off or anything. He went to a nice school and they put him in the baby class 'cos he couldn't read but I can read and write so I felt sorry for that as well but Mr Tom taught him to write and he was really good at drawing straight lines. And then William's Mum wanted him back but she wasn't nice, in fact she was horrid and she shut him in a cupboard with a dead baby but then Mr Tom came and rescued him and it was the dog that found him all tied up in the cupboard because dogs are really good smellers and then he was in hospital and Mr Tom had to rescue him again. And I liked Zach. He had a red bike and it was really sad when he got killed but William got his red bike so that was alright.
