

A Manual for Cleaning Women

by Candida Lloyd

A woman must always be clean. She must devote minutes and hours of every day to maintain an acceptable standard of cleanliness. To do this she will need the following:

A dustpan and brush to sweep away excess hair. All body hair is superfluous and ugly. The only exception is the hair on a woman's head which must be glossy, abundant and above all squeaky clean. Leg hair, armpit hair, pubic hair, arm hair and hair elsewhere must be torn away with wax strips or an epilator and then swept away. This will hurt but a woman must suffer to be beautiful

A Hoover will be useful for catching those teeny hairs missed by the dustpan and brush. Eyebrow hairs, stubborn chin hairs and any trace of a moustache must be painstakingly tweezered, threaded, waxed or lasered away. This will make a woman wince and her eyes water as she suffers the stinging pain, but she has no option but to endure.

A woman must refrain from complaining or frowning because this can cause a furrowed forehead and an unwanted crease between the brows. Thankfully the feather duster will help to prevent these marks by dusting away the cobwebs of unhappy memories, rejections, disappointments and losses which can damage a woman's face.

An essential part of the equipment for cleaning women is a selection of bottles containing soap, bleach, detergents and disinfectants (killing 99% of all known germs). These are for washing away all the bodily fluids a woman secretes from various parts: mucus, sweat, blood, snot, wax, piss, shit and tears.

None of these unsightly juices should be apparent to anyone else. They must be washed away instantly without trace.

Just in case one of these evil secretions should escape and create an odour, a fragrant spray will come in handy. Use it immediately to spritz away any trace of a nasty smell. This may also be used to disguise involuntary farts.

A woman will experience unsightly imperfections on her face and body. These blemishes: skin tags, spots, marks, dry skin, red patches etc. can be banished using a stiff brush. Adopting firm circular motions in the affected area will help to restore perfect skin.

Finally, it is not enough to be clean, odourless and blemish-free; a woman must radiate. Here a can of polish will finish the job. Use liberally all over to give the final touch to the the perfectly clean woman.
