

Mirror

by Fran Duffield

The garden
at night is another world strange yet familiar
never frightening

the slow light
of the moon makes secret what you hold
in the hollow of your hand

dissolves the veined petals suspended in sleep
to shifting greyblues,
the trees inkpools

white stones become luminous marking a stranger path through the shadows
to this mirror world